Dear Kusal,

I was thinking of contacting you because of the terrible stories coming out of India and the emergence of the Indian strain of the virus here in some areas of the UK. We are OK, and they are keeping a cautious watch over this new strain, as it is truly a global problem. No governments have been ready for this pandemic, and although a large proportion of the UK have been vaccinated, the problem remains particularly as international travel starts to open up.

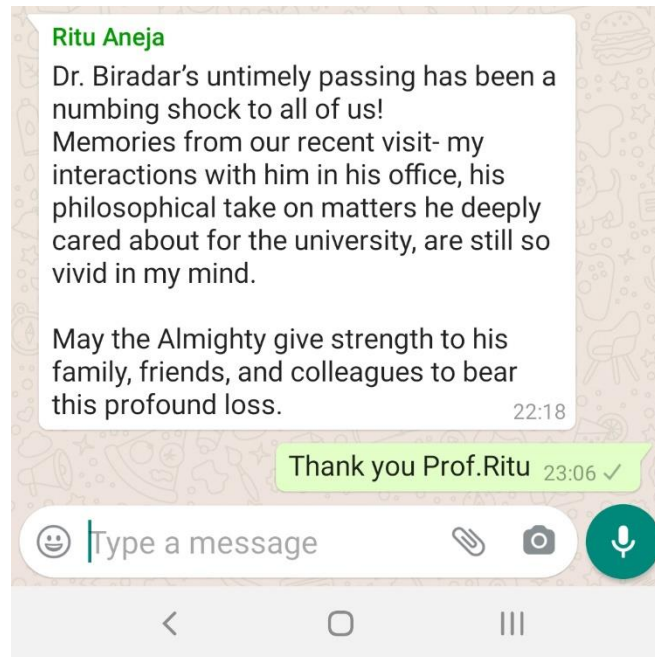

It is very sad to hear about your friend the Vice-Chancellor; I feel sympathy for you as he was a good supporter and clearly a strong influence. You will miss him and we will remember him.

I hope you have all had the vaccination. Where is your son now - I am not sure what line he is intending to follow.

Thinking of you all. Best wishes,

John
